fi History is the mixture of profit and delight, the seasoning of more serious studies, the reporter of cases adjudged by event, the interlude of our haps, the image of our present fortune, the compendiary director of our affairs, by which valour

is quickened, judgment ripened, and resolution entertained Here are the reasons why some estates live quietly, others turmoiled in continual disturbances, some flourish by the delights of peace, others by continuing war, some spend lavishly without profit,
